Teaching

Emory University / ACLS Fellow
July 2022 - PRESENT, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

- EAS190 - Persuasion and Propaganda in East Asia and Beyond: This writing-intensive undergraduate seminar surveys historical and contemporary issues of public communication in East Asian and Asian-American contexts. Students develop a nuanced understanding of rhetorical theory and criticism in cross-cultural and transnational contexts, as well as critical skills to evaluate public information and disinformation.
- EAS 385W - Chinese Political Thought and Propaganda: This upper-level, writing-intensive undergraduate course explores modern Chinese political thought and propaganda, examining its historical development and its impact on Chinese society, government, and foreign policy.

Pennsylvania State University / Assistant Teaching Professor of Communication Arts and Sciences
JULY 2018 - July 2022, UNIVERSITY PARK, PENNSYLVANIA

- CAS420 - Advanced Public Communication Seminar on Rhetorical Theory: This upper-level undergraduate seminar examines historical and contemporary issues in public communication from comparative and transnational perspectives.
- CAS100A - Effective Communication and Public Speaking: This introductory undergraduate course studies the effective use of oral and digital/visual communication as a means of addressing problems in public and civic contexts.
- CAS100C - Message Analysis and Civic Engagement: This general-education undergraduate course introduces students to principles of effective public communication and civic engagement with an emphasis on analyzing and evaluating public information from the rhetorical perspective.
- CAS175 - Persuasion and Propaganda: This course allows students to develop a more precise understanding of propaganda and the techniques of public communication. It includes important cases from the history of propaganda as well as contemporary cases of public advocacy that raise questions about the distinction between persuasion and propaganda.
- CAS170 - “What is Information:” This intermediate undergraduate seminar integrates perspectives from the social sciences and the humanities, and prepares students to think about and act in a world in which information and its linked concepts play an increasingly important social and political role.
