Teaching and Curriculum Development

Emory University / ACLS Fellow

AUG 2022 - PRESENT, ATLANTA, GEORGIA

- CHN 385W - Chinese Political Thought and Propaganda (in-person): This upper-level, writing-intensive undergraduate course delves into both historical and contemporary Chinese intellectual traditions and their political implications, tracing their evolution and influence on societal changes from early modernity through the big data era.

- EAS190 - Persuasion and Propaganda in East Asia and Beyond (in-person): This first-year undergraduate special topic seminar surveys historical and contemporary issues of public communication in East Asian and Asian-American contexts. Students will develop a nuanced understanding of rhetorical theory and discourse analysis in cross-cultural and transnational contexts, as well as critical skills to evaluate public information and disinformation.

Pennsylvania State University / Assistant Teaching Professor

AUG 2018 - MAY 2022, UNIVERSITY PARK, PENNSYLVANIA

- Advanced Seminar on Contemporary Rhetorical Theory (in-person): This upper-level undergraduate seminar examines historical and contemporary issues in political discourse from comparative and transnational perspectives.

- Persuasion and Propaganda (in-person): This course allows students to develop a more precise understanding of propaganda and the techniques of public communication. It includes important cases from the history of propaganda as well as contemporary cases of public advocacy that raise questions about the distinction between persuasion and propaganda.

- What is Information? (hybrid): This intermediate undergraduate seminar integrates perspectives from the social sciences and the humanities and prepares students to think about and act in a world in which information and its linked concepts play an increasingly important social and political role.

- Effective Communication and Public Speaking (in-person and online formats): This introductory undergraduate course studies the effective use of oral and digital/visual communication as a means of addressing problems in public and civic contexts.

- Message Analysis and Civic Engagement (in-person and remote formats): This general-education undergraduate course introduces students to principles of effective public communication and civic engagement with an emphasis on analyzing and evaluating public information from the rhetorical perspective.

Pennsylvania State University / Graduate Instructor

AUG 2013 – MAY 2018, UNIVERSITY PARK, PENNSYLVANIA

- CAS100A - Effective Communication and Public Speaking (in-person and remote format): This introductory undergraduate course studies the effective use of oral and digital/visual communication as a means of addressing problems in public and civic contexts.

- CAS100B – Interpersonal Communication (in-person): This general education course introduces students to principles of effective communication with a specific focus on collaborative communication and group problem solving. The goal of CAS 100B is skill development in effective group communication.

- CAS100C - Message Analysis and Civic Engagement (in-person and remote formats): This general-education undergraduate course introduces students to principles of effective public communication and civic engagement with an emphasis on analyzing and evaluating public information from the rhetorical perspective.
